Mr Justice Eady says it is right that UK courts determine privacy laws

Laws relating to the right to privacy should evolve through the UK courts rather than through legislation said Mr Justice Eady in a keynote address to the Sweet & Maxwell/JUSTICE Free Speech versus Privacy conference held today (December 1 2009).

According to Justice Eady it would have been impossible for lawmakers to predict the wide range of cases brought against the media based on Article 8 of the Human Rights Act, the right to respect for private and family life. This would mean that the resulting legislation would be insufficiently flexible to ensure an equal balance between the right to respect of private life and the right to freedom of expression.

Justice Eady said that it has been left to the independent judiciary to strike this careful balance on a case-by-case basis. Justice Eady pointed to Max Mosley’s recent legal action against the News of the World as just one of the cases that could not have been foreseen by legislators.

Speaking at the conference hosted by Sweet & Maxwell, a Thomson Reuters business and JUSTICE, a leading human rights charity, Justice Eady said if the UK courts failed to consider the right to privacy it would force claimants to take their cases to the European Court of Human Rights rather than seeking redress in their own courts.

Mr Justice Eady’s judgments have been criticised by some areas of the media for eroding freedom of expression. However, Justice Eady said that this criticism has been the natural outcome of the lack of legislation but added that critics cannot ignore the human right to respect for private life.

ENDS

Notes to Editors:

Sweet & Maxwell (www.sweetandmaxwell.co.uk) is a leading provider of information and solutions to the legal and professional markets in the UK and Ireland. With over 200 years of history and heritage in legal publishing, Sweet & Maxwell offers detailed and specialist knowledge, understanding, interpretation and commentary across a wide range of subjects in a variety of formats to meet customers' needs - books, journals, periodicals, looseleafs, CD-ROMs and the market leading online services, Lawtel and Westlaw UK. Sweet & Maxwell is part of Thomson Reuters.
About Thomson Reuters

Thomson Reuters is the world’s leading source of intelligent information for businesses and professionals. We combine industry expertise with innovative technology to deliver critical information to leading decision makers in the financial, legal, tax and accounting, scientific, healthcare and media markets, powered by the world’s most trusted news organization. With headquarters in New York and major operations in London and Eagan, Minnesota, Thomson Reuters employs more than 50,000 people in more than 100 countries. For more information, go to www.thomsonreuters.com.

Press enquiries:

Jane Lougher or Nick Mattison
Mattison Public Relations
Tel: 020 7645 3636

Peter Wylie
Corporate Communications Manager
Sweet & Maxwell
Tel: 020 7393 7123